

1.) Early relationships with colonists and Indians varied. The Algonquins lived in peace and traded products with the English. (pg 133) In the Caribbean, the Indians made the English leave when they tried to take over the Indians land. (pg 135) This shows it depends on how the English treated the natives. In conclusion, there were many different ways the Indians and the colonists interacted with each other.